Title: Mississippi Murder Men

The murder of Mississippi. That's what everyone was calling the assassination of my mother.

It was a nice, November night on the bank of the Mississippi River. The ghostly guy stole nothing. Just came in like a mouse, shot her, and left.

Little did he know that police are everywhere along the Mississippi. They caught the creepy, cocky crook and questioned.

"I will answer to nothing," he declared.

The detective killed him though after being convicted guilty.

The only problem was that they only had one perpetrator because the other one is still alive.

Me.

Title: Bloody Justice

Ruby walked down the dark alleyway that led to her house. She walked slowly, cautiously. She was thinking about her job, or specifically the case she was on. An interesting case indeed, maybe even entertaining. Yes, it was pleasurable: very, very pleasurable.

Three men had died in the past week, all aged twenty-five. All handsome men. Ruby chuckled to herself. Yes, they were all very handsome. A small giggle escaped her lips as she thought of her handiwork. Three slit throats.

Ruby stopped as she heard the thud of footsteps behind her.

Bang!

Obscure blotches drew near...

Police.

Ruby was...compromised.
